The moral of today's story is don't do laundry.... or at least don't drop your phone into the washing machine when doing laundry. Wah. Phone is nicely washed, spun and now reclining in a zip lock bag of rice. So yeah, if you need me over the next few days before I hopefully resurrect this phone or buy a new one, email, FB or call/text Bruce.

- Seth Joseph Ugh. That is a pain, Sarah. But maybe you'll find that you enjoy the time away from your phone?

Privacy on Social Media

- There really is no such thing as privacy when using social media- The very reason it exists is to reveal, not conceal.
- Stay abreast of your favorite website's privacy policies. They change- often- and in the case of Facebook, rarely notify you of the fact.

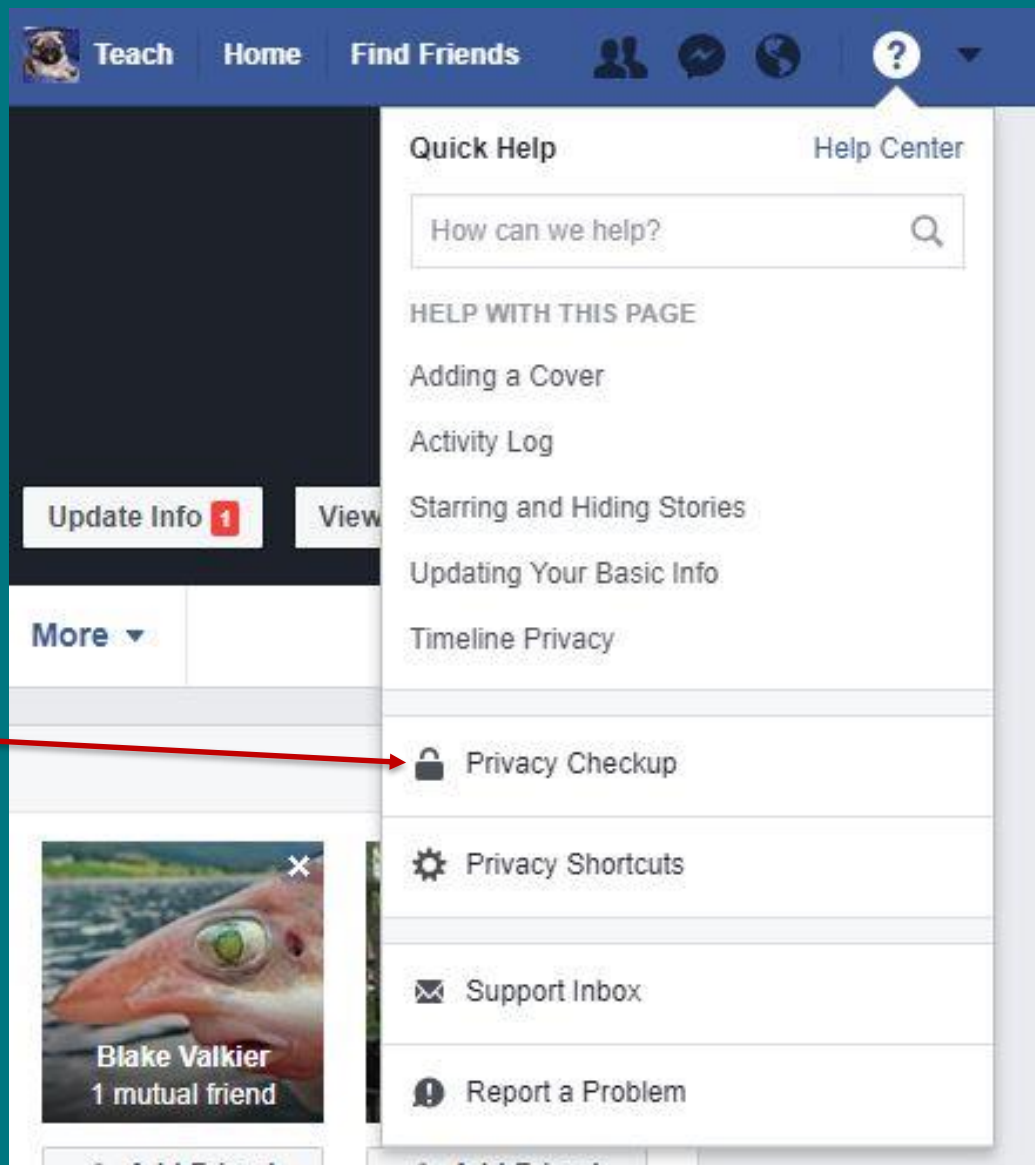

Privacy on Facebook continued

- Privacy Settings are only useful before you post. Once something is online, even if you delete it later, it is no longer within your control.
- Assume every click, search, and second is recorded.
- Check out <https://www.facebook.com/privacy/explanation> for Facebook's explanation of privacy.

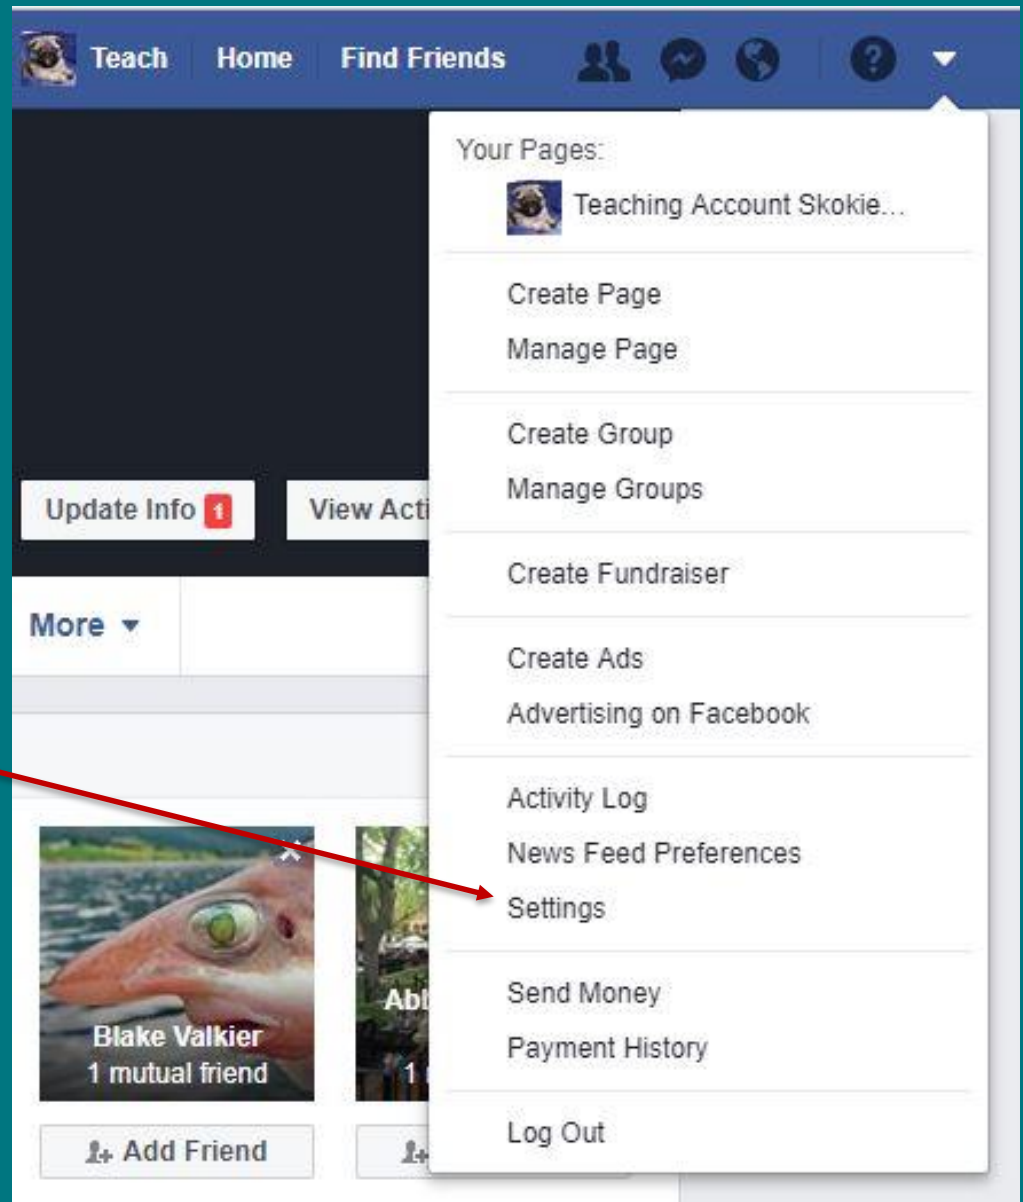

Quick Help Menu

The Privacy Checkup does a quick review of your privacy settings—a great way to stay up to date!

More menu options...

Under Settings you can further customize your privacy settings. You can also manage notifications, app permissions, blocking, and more!

Words of Wisdom

- Use the Privacy Checkup feature available in the Quick Help Menu for a quick review of your privacy settings, and check your more detailed privacy settings from time to time.
- Check the Facebook privacy policy—it can and does change without warning.
- Remember that your online identity is just as valuable as your in-person reputation.
- Use common sense! Would you say or do those things face to face? When in doubt, don't post it, nothing is really private online.
